There are few places you can see buildings by America's Big Three architects— Louis Sullivan, Frank Lloyd Wright, and H.H. Richardson— plus a park system by Frederick Law Olmsted. Buffalo is one of them.

On this tour, besides the master works by the Masters, you'll see scores of other beautiful buildings and houses by prominent national and international architects and the streets and neighborhoods where Buffalonians carry on their everyday lives.

We start with the foundation of modern Buffalo, and modern urban America: The building and grounds of what was the Buffalo State Hospital, designed by H.H. Richardson and Frederick Law Olmsted, conceived in 1870. We end with the Heath House by Frank Lloyd Wright of 1904. In between, you'll see world-altering industrial architecture, the preening mansions of Delaware Avenue, and the prototype for the skyscraper, Sullivan's Guaranty Building.

We'll put it all in context for you, as we point out dozens of buildings as markers of Buffalo's progress through the years.

- Kleinhans Music Hall
- First Presbyterian Church
- Ellicott Square by Daniel Burnham & Co.
- St. Paul's Episcopal Cathedral by Richard Upjohn
- The Canal District
- Niagara & Lafayette squares
- Millionaires' Row
- Allentown Historic District
- Delaware Historic District
- City Hall and Old County Hall
- Theater Historic District

- Bidwell, Chapin, Lincoln parkways
